

REAL ESTATE OF LEADERSHIP

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Principals, Sale Agents, Property Managers and Administrative staff tell us what leadership in the Australian real estate industry really looks like to them

REAL ESTATE LEADERSHIP IN AUSTRALIA IN 2017

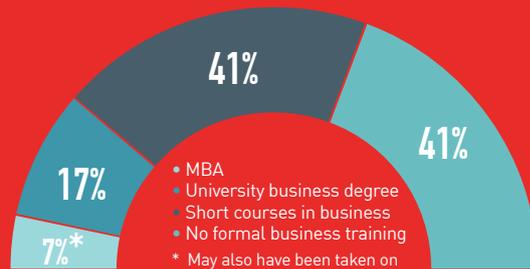

The stereotype of the big, street smart, self-taught real estate agent is being challenged by a new breed of business educated and managerially savvy agents.

The Real eState of Leadership research shows these new agents deliver leadership by running tighter ships that are more profitable, have better employee engagement and are more transparent around process and client management.

KEY FINDINGS INCLUDE:

- 21% of real estate agents say the quality of leadership in their organisation is excellent (45% say it is good)
- 12% say leadership in their business is poor or non-existent.
- 82% of principals feel qualified to lead their business
- 5% of principals feel completely unqualified to run their business
- 61% claim staying positive in changing times is a challenge
- 26% of leaders spend up to 50% of their time navigating the people and performance issues of the business

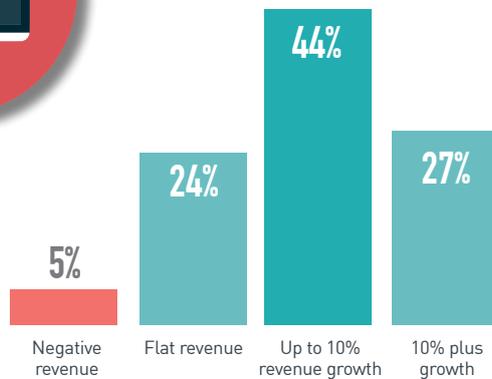

The higher the education levels, the greater the likelihood of financial success – 47% of businesses with negative growth and 44% of businesses with flat growth had no formal business training.

- MBA
 - University business degree
 - Short courses in business
 - No formal business training
- * May also have been taken on top of university education

DIFFERENT LEADERSHIP STYLES

(and the proportion of respondents who said this was the main leadership style)

Coercive	Authoritative	Affiliative	Democratic	Pacesetting	Coaching
A 'do as I say' style of leadership that gives order.	A 'come with me' approach. These leaders set goals but let team members decide how to get there.	Puts a lot of emphasis on team members, building morale and helping them feel good about working together as a team.	Encourages everyone to speak up and contribute. Sometimes slows things down as many people have different ideas.	Sets high standards and encourages others to meet these standards. Teams are highly self motivated, but sometimes feel pushed to excel.	Helps others to improve their habits and develop but can find this hard with those who are resistant to change.
10%	21%	23%	10%	12%	16%

8% of respondents were unsure how to classify the leadership style they experienced

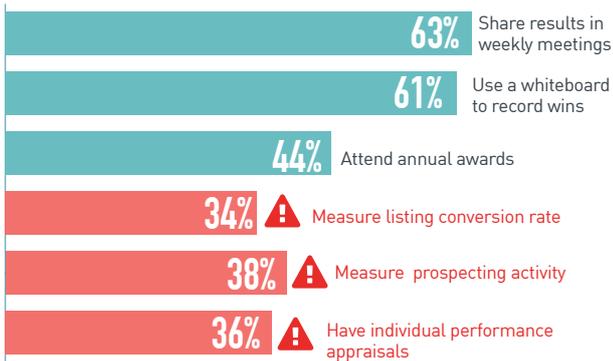

The leadership style used by the most financially successful agents is Affiliative with 29% of agencies experiencing growth higher than 10% identifying this style followed by 22% Coaching.

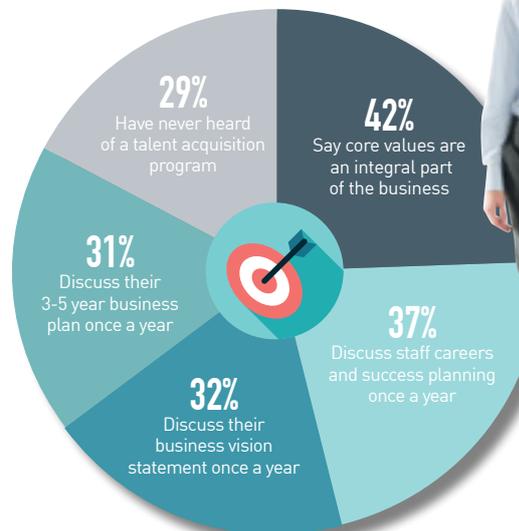

Coercive leadership styles are the least likely to achieve results – 17% of those surveyed whose businesses were experiencing negative growth described their boss as “just do as I say” compared with just 6% of those who were experiencing growth above 10%.
